SHĀḤ WALĪ ALLĀH’S THEORY OF THE SUBTLE SPIRITUAL CENTERS (LAṬĀʾĪF): A SUFI MODEL OF PERSONHOOD AND SELF-TRANSFORMATION*

MARCIA K. HERMÄNSEN, San Diego State University

I. INTRODUCTION

The human body together with its components and workings operates as a symbolic field standing in a mimetic relationship to other systems of the classification of society and knowledge. This is evidenced by the pervasive traditions of a microcosmic/macrocosmic analogy. Recent studies of culture and the history of ideas have indicated that these analogies reflect and serve to maintain other cultural assumptions such as those concerning power relationships or sexuality.¹ In certain religious traditions, models of the human body may transcend the visible or physical order to postulate parallel “subtle” or “spiritual” bodies which function to mediate between the material and the transcendent realm. The concept of a “subtle body” provides an especially flexible and malleable field for mapping concepts of the human individual and relating these to wider metaphysical and ideological systems. If the construction of the “subtle body” may be studied to indicate underlying constructs of the person, shifts in the positioning and description of bodily components within a tradition should reflect theological and cultural change within that environment.

In the following study, the detailed theory of the subtle spiritual centers of the person developed by the eighteenth-century Indian theologian and mystic Shāḥ Walī Allāh of Delhi (d. 1762) will be considered. While a primary focus of the paper is a description of the concept of a subtle body within the Islamic tradition, a further intent is to demonstrate how Shāḥ Walī Allāh’s recasting of elements of the model “embodies” his position on several theological issues as well as his understanding of spiritual transformation. Shāḥ Walī Allāh was recognized by subsequent generations as the intellectual instigator of a movement of reform among the Indian ulema, and certain aspects of cultural change and the reformist impulse are prefigured in his description of these subtle components.

The theory of the subtle spiritual centers (laṭāʾīf) developed by Shāḥ Walī Allāh of Delhi reveals the underlying structure of his schema for understanding the human individual. The term laṭīfa (plural laṭāʾīf) is derived from the Arabic word laṭīf meaning “gentle,” “sensitive,” or “subtle.” In Sufi terminology the word laṭīfa refers to a nonmaterial component of the person which can be influenced or “awakened” through spiritual practices. The expression laṭīfa may originate in the concept of a subtle body (jism latif), which is not Qur'anic but seems to have arisen in the third Islamic century. The Sufi concept of latifa became increasingly refined and complex and was used to explain psychological and spiritual progress of the spiritual aspirant toward annihilation (fanā) or subsistence (baqa) in the Divine Essence. Latifa has been translated by “subtlety,” “tenuous body,” “subtle point,” or “subtle essence.” Since these latā'if have been diagrammed in the works of Shāh Wāli Allāh with circular shapes, I prefer to refer to them as “subtle spiritual centers,” following the usage of Annemarie Schimmel, although the concept of “center” is not necessarily to be understood from the term itself.

Although some of the lat'īf have names corresponding to body parts or faculties or are sometimes described as being located in specific areas of the body (liver, heart, or mind), they are not to be understood as identical with the organs located there. “Thus the distinction is clearly to be made between the physical flesh of the heart and the latīfa which is named ‘Heart’ (qalb). Rather, the latā'if are taken to be local manifestations of identically named parts of a higher realm of the cosmological structure which is above the realm of created things.”

Among Sufi writers, Shāh Wāli Allāh gives one of the most detailed explanations of the latā'if to which he devoted an entire book, Altaf al-Quds, as well as references in some of his other works. As the theory and practice of latā'if represent part of the initiatory tradition in Sufism, it is somewhat difficult to find systematic discussions of these topics. As Wāli Allāh himself noted, “The writings of the Sufis may well be an amazingly effective alchemy for the specially gifted, but for the masses they can be a deadly poison.” He added, however, that since fragments of this knowledge had become public before his time, he felt called upon by God to clarify and correct this information as well as to explain its place in a larger body of knowledge. In developing his system of depicting and understanding the functions of the latā'īf, Shāh Wāli Allāh, to a large extent, built on models developed within the Naqshbandī Sufi tradition. Aspects of his model which are of particular interest here are his efforts to integrate it conceptually into a larger body of knowledge and to make it conform to the pattern underlying his own ontology. The reasons for those innovations which he introduces into the previous schema may be understood not only as resulting from these conceptual requirements, but also as reflecting larger patterns of cultural change.

II. GENERAL FEATURES OF SHĀH WALĪ ALLĀH’S THOUGHT

In his writings, Shāh Wāli Allāh was not primarily concerned with the situation of Islam in India facing opposition from the non-Muslim majority as the Mughal Empire... disintegrated. Rather, he was concerned with the state of Islamic intellectual and spiritual life in the entire Muslim world. He perceived that a great danger to this tradition had emerged through its fragmentation into various factions—the theologians, relying on their textual exegeses; the philosophers, relying on discursive reasoning and proof; and the Sufi mystics, relying on intuitive realization—each faction adhering to its own methodology and conclusions. He offered as his solution to this fragmentation the methodology of regarding any issue from the full range of disciplines and perspectives and striving to reconcile apparent but superficial conflicts through arriving at a comprehensive or unifying principle. This approach he termed taḥbīq. For this reason, a characteristic feature of his thought involves his efforts to synthesize and derive universal principles underlying diverse phenomena. For example, his master work, Hujjat Allāh al-Baligha [The conclusive proof of God], attempts this synthetic overview at metaphysical, social, and religious levels. Before describing Wālī Allāh’s theory of the subtle spiritual centers, a discussion of the dominant patterns in his thought is appropriate, since it is through this framework that he understands their structure and operation.

In his thought, Shāh Wālī Allāh synthesizes two disparate metaphysical orientations. One could be characterized as monistic in the tradition of the emanation theory of the Hellenized Islamic philosophers and Sufis influenced by Ibn ʿArabi’s (d. 1240) theory of the Unity of Existence (waḥdat al-wujūd). The other is the interpretation which maintains the Qur’ānic stance of a moral and existential distinction of good and evil, represented in Indian Sufism by the Unity of Experience (waḥdat al-shuhūd) of Shaikh Ahmad Sirhindī (d. 1625). Sirhindī’s philosophy notably emphasizes the struggle to overcome the negative aspects of existence or one’s own evil tendencies.

Shāh Wālī Allāh attempts to encompass or synthesize these differing metaphysical orientations by propounding a theory which is simultaneously one of a conflict of forces, whether two or many, and of one overriding great force which is the drive of the entire universe towards its greatest perfection or most comprehensive benefit (maṣlahah kulliyya). This movement toward the one great purpose is achieved only as conflicts and imbalances at inferior stages are solved or harmonized. Thus his system strives to make conflict intelligible and to give overcoming it a religious significance.

Wālī Allāh portrays the internal dynamic within spheres of experience as one of systems or levels composed of ordered parts with separate functions which may come into conflict. This conflict must be resolved or harmonized through achieving balance and harmony within the system. Once balance is achieved, the inherent perfection of the ideal form implicit in the person, species, or society is fulfilled, and this leads to the entire form or system expanding or moving up to a new, higher order.
According to Shāh Wâlî Allâh’s understanding, this movement can occur since the ideal forms of each species exist, independently from their particular instantiations, in an atemporal, transcendent realm known as the World of Images (‘âlam al mithâl). Any species can eventually surpass the limitations of its initial form through developing to a point where enough of its members implore Allah through the “supplication of their state” (takaffuf hâl) to emanate a new form with expanded possibilities.\(^1\)

This expansion of possibilities is not exactly evolutionary since the ideal form pre-exists its instantiations in the physical world and is sent down from Above. Thus it rather represents a progression through grades of being. This graduated model of spiritual progress has a long tradition in Sufi thought, for example, in Rûmî’s lines:

\begin{align*}
\text{From the moment you came into the world of being,} \\
\text{A ladder was placed before you that you might escape.} \\
\text{First you were mineral, later you turned to plant,} \\
\text{Then you became animal: how should this be a secret to you?} \\
\text{Afterwards you were made man, with knowledge, reason, faith;} \\
\text{Behold the body, which is a portion of the dust-pit. How perfect it has grown!} \\
\text{When you have travelled on from man, you will doubtless become an angel.}^2
\end{align*}

It now remains to explain how Shâh Wâlî Allâh’s understanding of this general principle, that at lower levels conflict must be overcome and balance attained in order for progression according to the great purpose of the universe to occur, is reflected in his theory of the subtle spiritual centers.

III. Shâh Wâlî Allâh’s Theory of the Subtle Spiritual Centers (LAṬĀ'IF)

The nature of the human individual, the parts which constitute a person, and the variations among individuals, are all given a high degree of attention in Shâh Wâlî Allâh’s thought. Shâh Wâlî Allâh was aware of himself as a special individual, marked for greatness from birth, and invested with renewership (mujaddidiyya), deputyship to the Prophet (khilâfa), and the role of being the opener (fâtih) of a new era. As a Sufi leader and master, he was presumably called upon to exercise psychological and character evaluation in order to advise the individuals of varying types who came to him for spiritual instruction.\(^3\) In his methods for assessing and categorizing persons, Shâh Wâlî Allâh drew on elements from several disciplines current at the time. From these, he developed a concept of the person as composed of a system of physical components, spiritual centers, and moral predispositions.

Shâh Wâlî Allâh’s works provide an important source for understanding how the cosmology behind a model of the spiritual components of a person may be related to special spiritual practices assigned to a particular aspirant by his instructor. In this, he synthesized elements of the Sufi tradition with contemporary medical concepts.

\(^3\) In the autobiography of Shâh Wâlî Allâh, Al-Juz‘ al-Latif, p. 174, he noted that among his gifts from God was the knowledge of human souls, their (implicit) perfections, and final destiny. It is clear from many of his writings that Shāh Walī Allāh was well acquainted with the theories of physiology of his time. In his autobiography, medicine (ṭibb) is mentioned as one of the subjects which he studied; in particular, he cites the work Muʿjīz al-Qānūn, which is an abridgement by Ibn al-Nafīs (d. 1388) of Ibn Sīnā's Qānūn.¹⁴

This system of ṭibb has been developed in particular by the Muslims of the Indian subcontinent, and it is still practiced there today, where it is called yūnānī dāwā, or Greek Medicine. Since the principles of this system of physiology are those of Shāh Walī Allāh, a brief outline will be presented here.

According to this tradition, there are two categories of substance in the person, body (jīsm, bādan) and soul (nafs). The body has members (aḍa) which are composed from the four primary elements (arkan): fire, earth, air, and water. These members are animated by certain faculties (qudw) of the soul. The science of the physical body ('ilm al-ṭibb) is a different science than the science of the soul ('ilm al-nafs), which considers the person from the standpoint of a soul which has a hierarchy of faculties located in and directing the members of the body.¹⁵

According to 'ilm al-ṭibb, inside the body food is transformed into the humors (akhlat) by being digested and then separated in the liver into four parts: red blood, white phlegm, yellow bile, and black bile. The most subtle portion of these humors goes into the blood, and then it is attracted to the heart, where it is mixed with the purest part of the blood in one of the heart's chambers. The denser part of the humors are transformed into bodily members (aḍa), while the subtler ones become spirits (arwāḥ), the pneumata of Greek medicine. These spirits are subtle vapors which bear the faculties of the person. Shāh Walī Allāh uses the term nasama to refer to the spirit formed from the most subtle humors, and this term is translated by pneuma due to its correspondence to that term in the Greek medical tradition.

The part of the subtle vapors which rises to the brain is divided there into ten parts and becomes the five outer senses (sight, hearing, taste, smell, and touch) and the five inner senses (the sensus communus [ḥiss mushtarak], the representation of perceptions [ṭawahhum], memory [ḥifẓ], and understanding [iḍrāk]). These are the terms used by Shāh Walī Allāh, although some authors may vary the list slightly.¹⁶ This part of the mixture of the humors which is carried to the brain is called ar-ṛūḥ al-nafsānī, the psychic spirit. The faculties flowing from it are called psychical (nafsānī). They include, as noted above, ones involved in the direct perception of sensible objects, the interpretation of their significance to the perceiver, and their being stored as memories.¹⁷

Besides the portion of the pneuma (nasama) which rises to the brain, there is a spirit called the natural spirit (al-ṛūḥ al-ṭabīʿī), which is returned to the liver, and an animal spirit (al-ṛūḥ al-ḥayawānī), which remains in the heart. These spirits distribute the respective faculties bearing their names,¹⁸ for example, the ṭawāḥ al-ḥayawānī operates in the body for reproduction, growth, and digestion, which would be "animating"

¹⁴ Ibid., p. 165.
¹⁸ Ibid., p. 27.
faculties. The brain and the heart are subject to the liver with respect to the "natural" or tab'i faculties, but in others the opposite is the case.19

Under the psychical faculties also come the motivating (muharrika) ones, which include the faculty of desire or concupiscence (shawaniyya), which expresses desire or acceptance, and the faculty of anger (ghadabiyya), which expresses aversion or anger.

Ideally, the temperament or mixture (mizāj) of a person, which is arrived at through the mingling of the humors, should be as balanced (muṣṭādil) as possible for the person at that stage of development. However, no one's temperament is believed to be absolutely balanced—"in fact, man, in order to live, must be somewhat warmer than absolute balance would permit."20 Traditionally, the temperament of a person was believed to vary with sex, age, the food eaten, and the region of the earth which he inhabited.

This concept of balanced temperament constitutes one aspect of Shāh Wālī Allāh's explanation of the human need for religion. He writes, "since the balance of the temperament of man is achieved according to what the species-based perfection bestowed, this cannot be fully realized except through those [religious] sciences which only the most perfect among them attain, and then are imitated by others, and through a divine law . . . ."21

The subtle spiritual centers operate on the physical workings of the body through the three lower lata'if; the Lower soul (nafs), the Heart (qalb), and the Intelligence ('aql). These centers are described as pervading the entire body, for while they are rooted in the organs (liver, heart, and brain), they are not believed to be identical with them. According to Shāh Wālī Allāh, these centers are the chief aspects of the person through which the acts required by the human specific form (suira nauciyya) are fulfilled. If they do not work together in harmony, the person will be in a daze resulting from their jostling around and interfering with one another. This confusion will come to an end either through physical death or through "voluntary death" (to one's desires or to indentification with the false self) as a result of spiritual exercises.22 A person who advances through harmonizing these three centers is then able to draw on influences of two higher centers, the Spirit (ruh), which is a higher level or aspect of the Heart, and the Mystery (sirr), the higher level or aspect of the Intelligence. Shāh Wālī Allāh explains progress through these centers and beyond in his model of the lata'if.

The Three-Tiered Model

Shāh Wālī Allāh in his theory of the lata'if further developed a system existing among the Naqshbandi Sufis, particularly the Mujaddidiyya branch, so called because they followed the teachings of Shaikh Aḥmad Sirhindī (d. 1625), who was known as the Mujaddid, or "Renewer" of the second millennium. This system was based on the idea that the human being had ten parts—five material, five immaterial. The lower level of the material parts consisted of the Lower Soul (nafs) and the four elements

SHAH WALI ALLAH’S THEORY OF THE SUBTLE SPIRITUAL CENTERS

(fire, air, earth, and water), while the higher level consisted of the five latā‘if, sometimes called the “five jewels” (al-jawwāhir al-khams): the Heart (qalb), Spirit (ruh), Mystery (sirr), Arcane (khafī), and the Super-Arcane (akhfā). The two levels of this Naqshbandi system were said to correspond respectively to the distinction between the World of God’s Creation (‘ālam al-Khalq) and the World of God’s Command (‘ālam al-amr), a distinction based on Qur’ānic terminology and having a long history in Sufi thought. For example, the Qur’ānic verse (17:85) “the Spirit is from the command of my Lord” (al-ruh min amr rabbī) is taken by the Sufis to mean that the rūh, or human spirit, comes from an immaterial timeless realm of God’s command (amr) which precedes physical manifestation.

It is interesting to note that the five-fold structure of the latā‘if according to the Naqshbandiya-Mujaddidiyya seems to parallel the model of the Islamic version of Greek medical theory (tibb) in which there are five inner and five outer senses. The model of the latā‘if which appeared early in Sufism clearly developed and was refined over time. Najmuddīn al-Rāzī (d. 1256), a Kubrawiyya Sufi of Iran and author of the Mirsād al-‘ibād, formulated a system of five latā‘if and found a Qur’ānic basis for the terms sirr and khafī—Qur’ān 20:7, “if thou makest utterance aloud, verily He knows the secret (sirr) and what is more hidden (khafī).” Alā ad-Daula Simnānī (d. 1336), whose works influenced Sirhindī, expanded the system of Najmuddīn al-Rāzī to a seven-fold one by adding below the five latā‘if the concept of a physical frame or mold (qalab) and above them a further center called the ḥaqiqiya or anāniyya. Sirhindī’s model then expanded to represent the latā‘if as part of a distinct set of symbols and practices (see figs. 1 and 2), and this was finally developed by Shāh Wali Allāh into a three-tiered model with a total of some fifteen components.

In arriving at a three-tiered model, Shāh Wali Allāh may have been influenced by Neo-Platonic and Sufi traditions. A tripartate model was used by Proclus, for example, who developed Aristotle’s concept of the pneuma as a way to explain how the incorporeal, eternal soul can become attached to the body. Among the Sufis, Al-Hujwīrī (d. 1071) depicts the person as composed of three levels; Spirit (ruh), Lower Soul (nafs), and Physical Body (jasad). Shāh Wali Allāh seems to follow this construction in his model of the latā‘if, in developing the concept of a spirit (ruh) operating at three levels. It should be noted that this usage of “spirit” should not be confused with the lat‘if of the same name.

The first and lowest level of the Spirit, which is the level related to the lowest set of the latā‘if in the physical world, is called the Pneuma (nasama) or the Airy Spirit (ruh hawa‘ī), both concepts borrowed from Hellenized Islamic medical theory. He explains that this spirit arises from the vapors of the elements (fire, earth, air, and water) as they are digested and transformed into humors. This spirit then flows throughout the flesh and bone of the body like "fire in a coal or the perfume in a rose." The Pneuma or airy spirit is actually the most refined distillation of these vapors, eventually being so refined as to allow the higher levels of the Spirit to attach themselves to the body.

The second level of the spirit, corresponding now to the middle circle of the manifest latent, is that of the Rational Soul (al-nafs al-nātiqa). This level of the spirit is what bestows the individual form of a person and what makes each individual that particular individual. In a striking passage from the Ḥujjat Allāh, Wali Allāh writes, "it [the rational soul] is like a small aperture from the Realm of the Holy through which descends to the pneuma everything which it is ready to receive."28

Finally, the highest level of the spirit is that of the heavenly (al-samawī) or the Sublime (al-ʻulwi) Spirit. This level of the Spirit corresponds to the Concealed Latā'īf or those spiritual components marking the transition between the human and the Divine. While the Pneuma (nasama) and the Rational Soul (al-nafs al-nātiqa) are created temporarily at the time of the creation of the body, the heavenly spirit (al-rūḥ al-samawī) is created long before this. It is related to the similitudinary (mithāli) form of the person which precedes ("pre-exists") him as a form in the World of Images (ʻālam al-mithāl). According to the later Sufis, the World of Images is an intermediary realm where predestined forms exist before their entry into physical manifestation in the material world. The idea of pre-existence, or a state before time begins, is fundamental in their understanding of destiny. The Sufis were particularly fascinated with the concept of changing or modifying destiny through having access to the forms of the World of Images as a result of spiritual attainments.29

The third level of the Subtle spiritual centers was described by Wali Allāh as located in the World of Images. His understanding of personal transformation and ultimately the shaping of the destiny of the human species in history is based on the idea that the forms behind manifestation are susceptible to alteration through human actions in the physical world. Therefore for Shāh Wali Allāh, the highest level of the Spirit and the corresponding Concealed Latā'īf are associated with Qāḍā (God's absolute decree) and Qadar (destiny as measured out and then transmitted to the world) and the angels as agents of this transmission. The direction of this movement, however, is not solely downward, for the higher level is able to receive influences from the human world, and it is the heavenly part of the soul which is affected by a person's actions and constitutes his form in the next life.

By explaining the spirit in this three-tiered way, Shāh Wali Allāh is able to reconcile traditional theological opinions with the concepts of the philosophers influ-

28 Ibid., p. 40.
29 For a discussion of this, see Fazlur Rahman, "Dream, Imagination and the ʻAlam al-Mithāl," in Gustave von Grunebaum, ed., The Dream in Human Societies (Los Angeles, 1966). Henry Corbin has also written extensively on the ʻAlam al-Mithāl, which he calls the "Mundus Imaginalis" in order to stress the creative or imaginal quality of this realm in contradistinction to its being merely "imaginary." In the Iranian tradition following Shihābuddīn Suhrwardī (d. 1191), the Master of the Ishrāqi school, the World of Images was described as having one region in which images subsist in their pre-existent forms and another in which spirits dwell after living on earth along with the forms of all thoughts, desires, behaviors, and works accomplished while in this world. Shāh Wali Allāh's concept of mithāl and his angelology reflect this understanding of the Imaginal World.
enced by Hellenistic thought concerning the spirit (rūḥ). The orthodox position was generally that it was material and created in time, while the philosophers identified it with an immaterial, eternal, spiritual soul. In his description of the three levels, the lowest level of spirit, the Pneuma, fulfills the role of the created spirit while aspects of the rational soul and the heavenly spirit accord with the philosophers’ concepts.⁹

The Concealed Laṭāʾīf (al-laṭāʾīf al-kāmina)

At this point it is appropriate to discuss in more detail the three levels of the spiritual centers conceptualized by Shāh Walī Allāh. The highest level, that of the Concealed Laṭāʾīf, is a new feature of his model. Referring to the diagram (fig. 3), one sees that this circle consists of five centers below the Divine Essence; the Most Arcane (akhfa), the Arcane (kaft), the Greater Selfhood (al-ananiyya al-kubra), the Light of the Holy (nur al-quds), and the Philosophers’ Stone (al-hajar al-baht, Persian: hajar-i-baht).\(^{31}\) It seems that Wall Allah was influenced in his conceptualization of these centers and their functions by Ibn ‘Arabi, particularly by his treatise, al-Tadbirat al-Ilahiyya fi Islah al-Mamlakat al-Insaniyya, which is among those edited by H. S. Nyberg in his Kleinere Schriften.\(^{32}\) Shah Wall Allah does not expound the functions of these “Hidden Latā’if” in any great detail, but overall their operation and arrangement is integrated into his theory of progress along the two paths of Saintship and Prophecy. They represent, for the most part, a conceptual rather than a practical formulation, since the annihilation of the manifest latā’if under the influence of the concealed latā’if is not necessary for the entire human species but is required in the case of certain individuals.\(^{33}\)

The Concealed Latā’if represent the final stages in which the mystic achieves subsistence (baqā) in the Divine Essence. The aspirant’s progress through them is no longer expressed in terms of harmonization and conflict resolution but is rather a realization of and participation in realms beyond the person’s individual identity. The understanding that a preliminary stage of conflict and harmonization in a person’s development gives way to being drawn automatically to one great force is not inconsistent or even innovative in the Islamic tradition. It may be traced through a long line of Muslim moral theorists including Miskawaih (d. 1030) and al-GhazalT (d. 1111), whose respective works which depict the acquisition of virtue through moral vigilance, self-control, and habitual good actions find an echo in Shah Wall Allah’s discussion of virtue and happiness in Hujjat Allah al-Baligha.\(^{34}\) In this tradition, purification and the elimination of vice through worship and obedience to religious law are depicted as a necessary prelude to inward achievement and the emergence, naturally and spontaneously, of mystical virtues. An indication of this pattern is seen in GhazalT’s list of progressively achieved mystical stages found in Ihya Ulum al-Din, Book 4. These stages lead from repentance, fear, asceticism, and patience to higher levels of gratitude, trust, love, and intimacy. In this tradition, a process of struggle, which could be considered taqwā (fear of God, piety, moral conscience), gives way to the mystical realm of kashf or marifa (disclosure, unveiling, or gnosis) at the further stages of personal development to which the struggle was a necessary prelude.\(^{35}\)

In Shah Wall Allah’s model, the limit of the individual form or identity is represented by the latifa akhfā, identified with the Rational Soul, marking the point of transition between the middle and the highest circle of latā’if. In one of the more extensive passages concerning the workings of the Concealed Centers, Shāh Walī Allāh writes:

The characteristics of the Arcane Latīfa (khafi) which is like a covering over the Greater Selfhood (al-anāniyya al-kubrā), are the realization (ma’rifā) of the flowing of the One Reality through all existent things and what is connected to this [flowing]. The properties of the Greater Selfhood are the appearance of its subsistence (qayyūmiyya) in the whole universe and its viewing itself as "Self-subistence" (al-qiyām) and that it is an angel in the angel and a stone in the stone and a tree in the tree, and so on in very many further instances.

The properties of the Light of the Holy (nur al-quds) are the knowledge of the arguing of the Highest Host and the [Divine] decree descending there. The properties of the Philosophers’ Stone (hajar-i-baht) are fading, without (our) knowing how (bi-la-kaifā), into the Greatest Theophany, so that the nature of the person becomes one of the limbs of the Truth (God), and his Lower Soul becomes superfluous like an extra finger and nothing else . . .

The Super Arcane (akhfā) is the lowest of all (of the Concealed Lata’if). Above it on the right side is the Light of the Holy and above it the Philosophers’ Stone, as if the Philosophers’ Stone is the refinement of the Light of the Holy and as if it follows purification and progress. On the left side of the Akhfa, lying above it, is the Arcane, and above it the Greater Selfhood, as if it follows purification and progress; similar to what we mentioned concerning the Heart and [its relationship to] the Spirit, and the Intelligence and [its relationship to] the Mystery; and the Divine Essence is above all.

From reading the description of the centers located around the circumference of the circle of the Concealed Latīf, we understand that we are to perceive it as composed as two sides, the left and the right (see fig. 4). These sides represent for Shāh Walī Allāh the paths of Saintship and that of Prophethood, or more properly, since prophecy ended with the Prophet Muhammad, the path of Prophetic Inheritance or Transmission (wirātha al-nubuwwa).

Embodied in Walī Allāh’s depiction of these paths is the question of the respective roles of the two spiritual types and their ranks. This topic, combined with the analysis of the meaning of annihilation (fanā) and subsistence (baqā) was hotly debated among the scholars and mystics of the Indian subcontinent. Those who held that the path of saintship, associated with the annihilation of self in the Divine Essence, was superior believed that the saint remained close to his divine origin, and they tended to support the philosophy of wahdat al-wujūd, or the Unity of Existence. Those who followed Sirhindī in emphasizing the superiority of the prophetic path on the basis that the prophet descends further into the world so that in his ascent he can perform a significant transformative function, supported the philosophy of wahdat al-shuhūd, or 36 These references to the arguing of the Highest angels and the Divine decree are part of the theory of qadā (decree) and qadar (predestination). Qadā refers to God’s Divine decree which has ordered the arrangement of existing things. Qadar applies to individual destiny or God’s measurement connected with things at particular moments. According to this, God’s decree of what will come to be is passed down to the earth through the successive ranks of angels, or, in another version, the decree emanates from the Divine Essence and passes down through the World of Images to manifest in the physical world. See my “Shāh Walī Allāh’s Theory of Religion,” pp. 17–19, for further discussion.

the Unity of Experience. This philosophy stressed the basic existential distinction of God and the world.\textsuperscript{40} Shah Walî Allâh tried to mediate these two approaches by affirming that their differences existed at a more superficial level and that at the most profound level the two systems were in agreement. His way of conceptualizing the spiritual paths of the Concealed Centers therefore reflects his metaphysical position on this issue. In fact, one may speculate that the models of the spiritual centers of Sirhindî and Walî Allâh are more elaborate than anything previous, in part because they are designed to map out stages of both descent and ascent. Shah Walî Allâh, by indicating a left and right side to his model of the parts of a human person, as well as his model for the traversal of the spiritual path, graphically depicts this mediation, since he does not have to position prophecy above saintship or vice versa. Rather, each path (right and left) must be traveled, and each is situated at the same level of the hierarchy.\textsuperscript{40a}

According to Walî Allâh, the Philosophers' Stone and the Light of the Holy are centers connected with the path of the Prophetic Inheritance. This is the path which Shah Walî Allâh symbolically associates with the movement of descent from the Divine Essence. Note that it is on this right side that he locates the emanation or descent of the Greatest Theophany (\textit{al-tajallî al-a'zam})\textsuperscript{41} of God and the descent of \textsuperscript{40a} While the Naqshbandiyya-Mujaddidiyya diagram also has two sides depicted at the level of the highest circle, these are not so readily associated with the distinct paths of prophecy and saintship (see fig. 2). Rather, they represent aspects of prophecy, since according to Naqshbandî theory, they are designated as the "divine realities," i.e., prayer, the Qur'ân, the Ka'ba, or as realities of individual prophets. A central path on the Naqshbandî diagram, that of the \textit{qayyûm}, was reserved for the select among the order, such as Ahmad Sirhindî and his descendants.

God’s decrees (qadar) communicated through the Highest Angels (al-mala‘ al-‘alā). Further evidence in this regard concerns his description of the latifā, “Light of the Holy.” In his early work, Hama‘āt, Wālī Allāh says that this latifā represents that aspect of the soul which receives an imprint from the highest circle of the angels. He associates the name of the center “Nūr al-Quds” with the “light” (nūr) of God’s guidance—“a light to which he guides whom He will” (24:35)—and the “light upon light” of the Light Verse of the Qurʾān. Similar references may be traced to Ibn ʿArabī’s treatise al-Tadbīrāt, cited above. In fact, Ibn ʿArabī’s text supplies further clues to Shah Wālī Allāh’s understanding of the function of this latifā, since it mentions that the secret of destiny (qadar) is related to the two lights, one by which God guides and the one to which man is guided. The idea of the “two lights” and their relationship to one another is a Qurʾānic exegesis popular in Sufi thought as a metaphor for the mystical realization of Divine light which is projected to the human being and in fact needs to realize itself there. Ibn ʿArabī refers to this light imagery in an interpretation of the Light Verse of the Qurʾān, which finds an echo in Shah Wālī Allāh’s understanding of the latifā “Light of the Holy” and its connection to destiny.

Then when the light by which He guides conjoins the light to which one is guided, the person sees the realm of the heavens and the earth and he perceives the secret of destiny (qadar)—how it controls created things—and this is His, may He be exalted, saying: “Light upon Light” (24:35).42

The Philosophers’ Stone (al-hajar al-baht), a center often alluded to by Shah Wālī Allāh, particularly in the context of the Prophetic experience, is also found in Ibn ʿArabī’s work. In an unpublished letter, Wālī Allāh makes his source explicit by recounting that in the works of Ibn ʿArabī the name—“perplexing stone” (ḥajar-i-baht)—is applied to this latifā because of its marvelous and perplexing nature. Originally, the ḥajar-i-baht indicated a mysterious substance which used to be presented as a gift to princes and nobles. It could not be classified as vegetable, mineral, and so on, and this latifā similarly possesses amazing properties.43 Ibn ʿArabī, in his treatise al-Tadbīrāt, discusses the Philosophers’ Stone as one of the human “stones” (ahjār), using stone in the sense of “jewel,” jewels (jawāhir) being a term used by other Sufis to refer to the latā’if. According to Ibn ʿArabī, the Philosophers’ Stone is an essential point in the heart, equivalent to the pupil in the eye which is the locus of vision . . . ; if there is rust on the heart the existence of this stone will not be manifest. All of the spirits (arwāḥ) which are in the human being, such as Intelligence and others, anticipate the witnessing of this point. Thus, when the heart becomes polished through meditation, dhikr, and [Qurʾān] recitation then this point will become apparent. When it manifests that in it which parallels the essential presence of God, there spreads out from that point a light because of the theophany, and it flows to all corners of the physical body and perplexes the mind and more. Then the light and its rays fill this stone, dazzling them.44

Later in the same passage, Ibn ʿArabī associates this experience with the mystical state of subsistence (baqā), a state which is connected with the role of the prophet, again confirming Walî Allâh’s association of this latîfa with the side of his model representing “Prophetic Inheritance.”

It should be noted that these centers on the side of “Prophetic Inheritance” are placed along the path of the Greatest Theophany (al-tajallî al-a’zîm)—the primal movement of descent from God into manifestation, according to the emanationist model. Here again we have prophecy associated with descent into the world, echoing a major theme of Sirhindî and his followers that the prophet descends further into the world than the saint in order to transform it.

The saint, on the other hand, is associated with the state of fanâ, or the annihilation of identity or self-consciousness into the greater level of the Divine Presence. Shâh Walî Allâh associates the two latîfâ, the Greater Selfhood (anâniyya kubrâ) and the Arcane (khâfî), with this spiritual experience. The term anâniyya kubrâ (Greater Selfhood) does not seem to be found in the classical tradition. Anâniyya, “Selfhood” or “I-ness,” which seems to be interchangeable with anâ‘îyya in the sense of “I-ness,” is found as early as the ecstatic sayings of Bistâmî (d. 874). Anâniyya, in modern Arabic, can have the negative connotation “selfishness” or “egotism,” which is clearly not Shâh Walî Allâh’s intention here. Simnânî used the term anâ‘îyya in the context of his association of prophets with the various spiritual centers (latîfâ). In Simnânî’s discussion, the Heart was associated with Prophet Abraham, while the “Seal” of the person was the “true” center or haqqiyya which is associated with Muhammad. He called this interior seed of the heart the anâ‘îyya or “true I-ness.”

Khwâja Muhammad Parsâ (d. 1420), a disciple of Bahâuddîn Naqshband, describes the latîfa called anâniyya as a uniquely human possession which mirrors the theophanies of God. According to Parsâ, the Sufi’s states of annihilation (fanâ) or subsistence (baqa) depend on this latîfa.

Shâh Walî Allâh follows a Naqshbandî teaching in explaining two types of fanâ while mentioning the anâniyya latîfa. The two types of fanâ are the annihilation of the tenebrous existence (fanâ al-wujûd al-zulmâni) and the annihilation of the spiritual existence (fanâ al-wujûd al-rûhâni). According to Shâh Walî Allâh, the first annihilation (of the tenebrous existence) takes place when the material components of the person, then the centers Heart and Intelligence come under the control of the centers Spirit and Mystery. The higher achievement of “annihilation of the spiritual existence” occurs at the level of the hidden latîfî when the Greater Selfhood (al-anâniyya al-kubrâ) gains ascendency over the person so that his lesser selfhood melts away. This movement upward traces the “path of saintship.”

48 Khwâja Muhammad Parsâ, Tuhfat al-Salikin (Delhi, n.d.), p. 363. Parsâ’s works were known to Shâh Walî Allâh, and he is cited by name in al-Tafhimât il-Lâhiyya, vol. 1, p. 242. Shâh Walî Allâh further explains that the Greater Selfhood (al-anâniyya al-kubrâ) at the macrocosmic level is the Universal Soul’s self-knowledge while the Lesser Selfhood (al-anâniyya al-sughhrâ) consists of self-knowledge on the part of souls possessing volition, i.e., angels, people, animals, and jinn. See al-Tafhimât il-Lâhiyya, vol. 1, Tafhim, no. 39, p. 139.
49 Al-Tafhimât il-Lâhiyya, vol. 1, p. 304.
Both the Arcane (khafī) and the Greater Selfhood are associated with the path of saintship and the process of ascent and ultimate annihilation in the Universal Soul (al-nafs al-kulliyya). The concept “Universal Soul” in Walī Allāh’s thought represents the Macrocosmic World Soul which receives God’s first emanation. From this Universal Soul emerge the genus, species, and, finally, the individual souls like bubbles emerging from an ocean.

Shāh Walī Allāh’s placing the Arcane (khafī) above the Super- or Most-Arcane (akhfā) is initially puzzling (see again fig. 4). He explains the apparent discrepancy or departure from tradition in the following passage:

If you say, “If the Super Arcane is lower than the rest of the Concealed Laṭā’īf then why is it called the Super Arcane?”

I reply that it is called the Super Arcane because the comprehensive general knowledge which is obtained from [following] the two courses [the paths of progress towards Divine Essence] together, is only achieved after the two courses. The traveller on the mystic path arrives only after completing both of them, and therefore it [the akhfa-being at the foot of each path] is called the “Super Arcane.”

The Manifest Laṭā’īf (al-laṭā’īf al-bārīza)

These manifest laṭā’īf are the components of the middle circle which represents the place where the divine and the earthly or material aspects of the person are mediated through the development and ultimate transcendence of individuality. This middle circle represents the arena of voluntary self-transformation. Another way of expressing this is that for Shāh Walī Allāh the middle circle is understood to depict the human person in tension between the angelic or higher forces attracting him from above and the material or animalistic component of his being pulling him from below. The tension between the angelic and the animalistic forces figures prominently in Shāh Walī Allāh’s theory of virtue and the attainment of happiness.

This tension and the means for mediating it are reflected in his positioning of the three circles of laṭā’īf so that the level of the centers correlative to a person’s individuality, his emotions (heart) and intelligence (ʿaql), is found between the heavenly spirit and the material circle of the four elements. A development of Shāh Walī Allāh’s model, which builds on previous Sufi depictions of the laṭā’īf, is his elaboration of the middle circle as an area for the expression of individual intelligence, emotional sensitivity, and will so as to enable the person to successfully integrate and balance the demands of his other components.

This basic understanding of the dynamic of the human condition persists even today among Muslim communities from Morocco to Indonesia. Anthropologist Richard Kurin, in his studies among Pakistani Muslims, found that their common understanding of personhood envisioned three separate but intersecting domains: rūḥ, ʿaql, and nafs (spirit, reason, and body). While angels are said to have a rūḥ but no Man, being the only creature with reason able to discriminate between good and evil, functions at all three levels during life in this world. Kurin suggests the following diagram of the relationship of these components in this life (fig. 5).

FIG. 5.—Components of personhood in the life process (after diagram by R. Kurin, in his article in B. D. Metcalf, Moral Conduct and Authority: The Place of Adab in South Asian Islam [Berkeley, 1984]).

While the Qur'anic or theological formulation echoed in "popular" Islam stresses resolution of the tension between matter and spirit in the afterlife, the Sufis and philosophers who drew on teleological ethics in the Greek tradition (akhlāq) portrayed it as attainable by developed persons during the earthly phase of existence. This confidence in an ultimate resolution facilitated Shāh Walī Allāh's reconciliation of monistic (wujdī) and dualistic (shuhūdī) views.

Comparing Shāh Walī Allāh's middle circle with the Naqshbandī model (see figs. 1, 2, and 3), one sees that he has modified it by adding the Intelligence (‘aql) as a new center and has removed the Arcane to the topmost circle.

At the top of the middle circle Shāh Walī Allāh has placed the Super-Arcane. This center, according to his thought, corresponds to the Rational Soul, which is the source of the individuality of the person while transmitting the characteristics of the specific form. At the bottom of this circle is the Lower Soul (nafs) or the Bodily Mold (qalab). Each of these topmost and lowest centers symbolically marks a transition point in the schema of personhood—the Rational Soul, between the human and the Divine or angelic, and the Lower Soul, between the psychological (nafsāni) and the natural (tabī‘ī), material functions of the person.

The descriptions of the centers around the circumference of the middle circle indicate that, as in the case of the topmost circle, it should be perceived as composed of two sides or paths: the left and the right. On our left is placed the center, Intelligence (‘aql), and above it the Mystery (sirr). On the right side is found the Heart (qalb) and above it the Spirit (ruh). Shāh Walī Allāh specifies that the Mystery (sirr) represents a higher aspect or refinement of the Intelligence, after it has given up earthly inclinations, just as the Spirit (ruh) represents a further refinement of the qualities of the Heart (qalb) latīfa. Therefore, his arrangement of the latī‘if around the circle symbolizes this affinity and hierarchy and at the same time indicates the paths which an aspirant might follow in order to progress upward towards the Divine Essence.

The Circle of the Created World (‘alam al-khalq)

Following the description of the text, one would expect the lowest level, which is said to consist of the Mold (qalab), or Lower Soul (nafs), and the four elements, to follow the same pattern as those above. In al-Tafhīmāt al-Ilāhiyya and his other works, this circle is not depicted, and the diagram in figure 3 has been constructed on the basis of passages in several works.

This arrangement is based on sympathetic correspondences among the elements. Shāh Walī Allāh notes in a letter to his disciple Muhammad ʿĀshiq of Phulat that his association of the elements differs from that of the Sirhindī Shaikhs (the Naqshbandiyya-Mujaddidiyya).57 In their model, the arrangement of lātāʿīf and elements was asymmetrical, and the Heart (qalb), in particular, was not associated with an element. Walī Allāh rectified this omission by associating the Heart with the element earth, the Spirit with water, the Mystery with fire,58 and the Intelligence, as in other traditional ethno-sciences such as tibb or astrology, with air. A right/left axis is maintained in the circle, for the pairs fire/air and earth/water are elements having affinities to one another according to ethno-sciences such as tibb and astrology.

In his arrangement of the elements at the level of the physical world, Shāh Walī Allāh positions them in accordance with the themes of descent (prophecy) and ascent (saintship) depicted at higher levels. Thus the elements fire and air are on the side of the diagram beneath the Intelligence, Mystery, and the Hidden Lataʿīf of the “Path of Saintship,” the Arcane and Greater Selfhood. Appropriately, the images of air and fire in their activities evoke the ascent motif. By comparison, earth and water, on the other side of the model, lie beneath the Heart and Spirit, as well as on the side of the highest centers of the “Path of the Prophetic Inheritance.” The images of water and earth correspond to the motif of descent rather than ascent. Likewise, the latīfa Spirit (rūḥ) is associated with the motif of God’s breathing His spirit into humanity (Qurʾān 15:29), again mirroring the movement of descent.

Progress through the Lataʿīf

Shāh Walī Allāh’s model of the lātāʿīf includes a theory of how progress is made from one latīfa to the next. In the lower levels, this involves harmonizing and balancing the physical components through a proper cooperation of the Intelligence, Heart, and Nafs (Lower Soul). The Divine Law (sharīʿa) is designed to bring all persons into this proper state, and progress beyond this stage is not required of any person in order to achieve individual resurrection and reward in heaven, for it is recognized that only certain special persons will be drawn to the path of higher development.59

57 In the unpublished letters of Shāh Walī Allāh, Maktūbat-i-Dīnī-va-ʿIlmī being prepared for publication by the Indian Institute of Islamic Studies, Tughlaqabad, India. Letter no. 51 to his disciple Muḥammad ʿĀshiq.

Beyond these initial requirements, common to all humans, is the cultivation of the ruḥ (Spirit) and the sirr (Mystery, Secret), the respective higher attunements of the Heart and Intelligence. According to Shāh Wali Allāh, the cultivation of these lata’if was first taught by the early Sufis, such as Junayd. Since the capacity to awaken the lata’if has developed in human spiritual history, this helps to explain successive religious revelations and why Sufi teachings have continued to elaborate further the Islamic sharīʿa. In a discussion of some Sufi practices, Shāh Wali Allāh describes the way to purify the Spirit (ruḥ) as the observance of ritual purity at all times, Qurʾān recitation, mystical exercises, and cultivating an intuitive relationship with the souls of the saints. The Mystery (sirr) is awakened by contemplating God’s attributes, meditating on His names and silent and wordless dhikr (remembrance of the divine names and attributes). It can be seen that Wali Allāh associates practices of a more “mental” nature with the sirr, which is, of course, related to the center ‘aql (Intelligence) rather than Heart (emotion).

In Alīf al-Quṣīd, he observes that there are three ways to recognize the cultivation (tahdhīḥ) of the lata’if:

1. once this is achieved, the person will find delight and pleasure in the things specific to each lata’if;
2. he may exhibit particular behavior and a developmental stage specific to a certain lata’if. Thus, the man of certainty has mastered the Intelligence, while the person of ecstasy and longing has mastered the Heart, and so on;
3. a person may see visions (waqīʿāt) which demonstrate that certain lata’if have been cultivated or purified.

According to Shāh Wali Allāh, the Seeker, after completing the journey through the spiritual centers, finally is dominated by the same lata’if which was originally strongest in his nature (fitrā). Thus, one whose Heart is strong will primarily master states of ecstasy, longing, and disquietude, even though all of his lata’if have been completely awakened.

The means of cultivating lata’if beyond the ruḥ and sirr is not gone into in detail by Shāh Wali Allāh, but it apparently occurs through gnostic contemplation leading to loss of self in the universal, rather than in overcoming conflict through spiritual practices enjoined to curb animalistic tendencies. This concurs with his metaphysical explanation that conflict at lower stages is later superseded by the attraction of the one universal force or beneficial purpose (maṣlahā kulliyā).

In his description of the Sufi terms fānā (annihilation) and baqā (subsistence), as well as the states (ahwāl) and the stages (maqāmāt), Shāh Wali Allāh incorporates his understanding of the lata’if. He explains that if the person attends to his worship over 60 Ibid., p. 72.

63 Ibid., p. 108. Some of these teachings may be drawn from the Chishti tradition of spiritual training in which Shāh Wali Allāh was an initiate. For example, in al-Taḥfīmāt al-Ilāhiyya, vol. 1, p. 138, he mentions a Chishti cosmology of dhikr based on the three worlds or realms of Malakūt, Jabarūt, and Lāhūt. The fruit of refining the ruḥ which is intimacy and joy represents God opening Malakūt to the aspirant. Jabarūt is opened when the influence of the Arcane overwhelms him producing the vision of God in the creation and the creation in God (al-haqq). The level of Lāhūt is opened when the refinement of the Super-Arcane is achieved.
time, each of the centers will absorb its portion of this worship, and the naturally low animalistic attributes will change to virtuous angelic ones. When these attributes become firmly established, the person’s acts will continuously manifest them, and then they are called “the stages” (maqâmât). On the other hand, if these attributes appear on occasion and then fade away and do not last for very long, they are called “states” (ahwâl) or “moments” (awqâf).

Shâh Wall Allah’s description of the initial stages of progress and the aptitudes of spiritual aspirants based on the natural preponderance of their latâ’îf follows the synthesis of Sufi manuals with Aristotelian theories of the soul. At the level of basic functioning, the Lower Soul (nâfs) looks after physical requirements, the Heart is responsible for emotions and judgments based on its response of attraction or repulsion, and the Intellect recollects the past and plans for the future. At the moral level, if the Lower Soul or the Heart comes to dominate the Intellect this will lead to problems of character and behavior.

Integrating his theory of levels of the spirit with a further set of Sufi categories based on the Greek theory of types of souls, Walî Allâh notes that if the Pneuma (nasâma) of the person becomes dominated by his physical and bodily needs, his Lower Soul (nâfs) will become animalistic (nâfs bahimiyya).

If it is able to free itself from this domination and respond to the brain and heart, his Lower Soul will become “human.” Once the Pneuma comes under the influence and dominion of the two higher levels of the Spirit, the Rational Soul and the Heavenly or Angelic Spirit, the Lower Soul becomes “angelic.” When this level is attained, the middle circle of the Manifest Latâ’îf comes into operation.

Returning to the three lowest of the “Manifest Latâ’îf”—the Lower Soul, Heart, and Intelligence—each of these centers is correlated with one of the three levels of the Spirit. Thus the Lower Soul is described as having stronger relationship with the Pneuma, the Intelligence with the Rational Soul, and the Heart with the Heavenly or Angelic Spirit.

The tension between the animalistic and the angelic components of the person figures prominently in Shâh Walî Allâh’s theory of virtue and morality and is implicit in his theory of the latâ’îf. According to his conception, these components in each individual will tend to interact in a relationship of either cooperation (îstilâh) or mutual contention (tajâdhub). There are also further permutations of these forces, such as one being by nature stronger than the other in a given individual. For Walî Allâh the respective strengths and combinations of these factors produce types of individuals who will be susceptible to various sorts of spiritual and moral disciplines.

He follows traditional Sufi categories in his explanation of the terminology, based on the Qur’ân, of the Soul which either “commands to evil” (al-nâfs al-ammâra bi’il-sâr) (12:52), blames (al-nâfs al-lawwâma) (75:2), or is content and at peace (al-nâfs al-mútâma’înna) (89:27). If the animalistic side dominates a person to the extreme, he may reach a point where his Lower Soul (nâfs) “commands evil.” If both of the angelic and animalistic forces are operative, he will make moral efforts to control or check his impulses, thus embodying the “blaming” quality of the Lower Soul. Finally, if the angelic component overcomes the animalistic, his Heart is transformed to the level of Spirit (ruh), and the Lower Soul becomes peaceful (mutma’īnna).

It has been seen previously that the idea of conflict and cooperation is central in his thought. This is repeated in his explanation of the Sufi concepts of fanā (annihilation) and baqā (subsistence). According to Shāh Wālī Allāh, if a person’s laṭā‘if interact in a confused way so that they mingle or bond with one another, the result is intoxication or passion in the personality, leading to a spiritual state of annihilation (fanā), i.e., loss of self-control or self-awareness. However, if each of the laṭā‘if operates in its proper jurisdiction, it will remain independent but assist the others in their functions. This will ultimately lead to the spiritual state of subsistence (baqā) in which he subsists in sobriety and constancy.69

The discussion of categories such as fanā vs. baqā, or intoxication vs. sobriety, was germane to a fundamental debate among the Sufi theorists concerning the relative status of the path of saintship vs. that of prophecy. In discussing the highest level of the Concealed Laṭā‘if, Shāh Wālī Allāh does not speak of cultivating these centers through performing specific practices for their awakening, thus his depiction of the respective paths of saintship and prophecy through them serves a conceptual rather than a practical intent. He explains that a spiritual aspirant’s temperament would incline either to the path of Prophetic Inheritance or to the path of Saintship—according to whether his animalistic and angelic components interacted in a relationship of “cooperation” (iṣṭilāḥ) or “mutual contention” (tajaddhub). He held that the path of saintship was for those of lofty soul whose two components were in conflict with each other.70 An interpretation of his thought on this point is that the “angelic” or “saintly” type of person rejects his physical side and in doing so tends to lose his earthly identity. This accords with the interpretation of Sirhindī and his followers that the saint is one who does not care to descend so far into the physical world.

As a corollary, the type of person who is able to harmonize both aspects of his nature, and thus can function in the physical world to carry out God’s decrees on earth, is most suited to be heir to the prophetic transmission.

Consistent with his efforts to mediate between the two poles of Sufi thought, Shāh Wālī Allāh favors the integration of both paths, that of prophetic inheritance (wirātha al-nubuwwa) and saintship (wilāya) to produce the “Inspired Person” (muhaddath).71 In his earlier works he used the title “one who is instructed” (mufahham) to indicate this level of integration of both paths.72 In Hujjat Allāh al-Bāligha the mufahhamūn are models for those who correct their bestial or animalistic side but do not totally cut 72 Idem, al-Tashihāt al-lāhiyya, vol. 2, p. 146, tafhim no. 122, “Being instructed (tafhim) is the lot of the Inspired One (muhaddath). God the Exalted said, ‘We made Solomon understand it’ [Qur’ān 21:79] and the Prophet, peace be upon him, said, ‘There were among those before you people who were inspired without being Prophets, and if there are any in my community, it is ‘Umar.’” See also idem, Hama‘āt, pp. 110–11.

According to Wali Allah, the path of Prophetic Inheritance (wirātha al-nubuwwa) takes place through the attraction of the highest level of the spirit from the World of Dominion (rūh al-malakūtī), and the person in this case attains annihilation (fanā) in the Holy Spirit (al-rūh al-quds). This path involves receiving inspirations from the Angelic Host through the Holy Spirit, which communicates to the prophets.

The path of Saintship, on the other hand, passes through Minor Saintship (al-wilāyat al-sughrā), which is attained through cultivating the manifest spiritual centers, to Major or Greater Saintship (al-wilāyat al-kubrā). Through the attraction of the Rational Soul, the seeker passes beyond Major Saintship, to annihilation in the "Greater Selfhood" (al-anānīyya al-kubrā) and final reabsorption into the Universal Soul (al-nafs al-kulliyya) underlying the cosmos.

The highest level of attainment, the integration of the saintly and the prophetic paths embodied in the person of the "Instructed One" (mufahham), or the "Inspired One" (muḥaddath), would be situated at the pinnacle of the highest circle, the place of one who had interiorized both paths. He combines both the saintly and the prophetic mode by communicating the formal aspects of causality represented by the Universal Soul working through the Greater Selfhood (the path of Saintship) and the (prophetic) implementation of the divine decree revealed through the agency of the angels. This represents the meeting point of causality expressed in historical time and the awareness of its transcendent, eternal source.

Shah Wall Allah goes further than the previous tradition in presenting sacred history as the realization or even expansion of potentials inherent in the subtle spiritual centers. In this he correlates the development of lata'if with phases of progress in human spiritual history. Previous Sufis associated the various lata'if with specific colors and qualities, and, in time, lata'if were also linked with the succession of prophets and their spiritual attributes. Sufis who drew inspiration from a particular prophet might perform exercises of concentration on the spiritual centers connected with him. This influence was sometimes referred to as a mashrab, or source of inspiration; for example, the Musavi Mashrab would indicate the way of Moses.

An example of one of the more detailed associations of prophets with spiritual centers is found in Ala'uddaula Simnānī (d. 1336):

One may also recall the list developed by the Kubrawi mystic Simnānī, who connects the seven prophets with the seven lata'if or spiritual centers of man: the Adam of man's being, connected with black color, is the qalabiyya, the outward, formal aspect; Noah (blue color), the aspect of the nafs, the Lower soul; Abraham (red color), the aspect of the sirr, the innermost core of the heart; Moses (white color), the spiritual (rūhī) aspect; Jesus (luminous black), the innermost secret (khafī); and Muhammad (green color), the haqqiyya, the point connected with divine reality. According to these theories, the mystics who had reached the green after passing the luminous black is the "true Muhammadan."

Shahi Wali Allah correlates the lata'if and the series of prophets in a historically developmental way. In his mythic explanation of the progressive awakening of human spirituality in al-Tafhimat al-Ilâhiyya, he describes the relationship of the microcosmic world of man (al-‘alam al-şaghîr) to parallel developments at the level of the Macrocosm (al-‘alam al-kabîr). According to his description, at the creation of Adam, God emanated the ideal human form with three spiritual centers, the Heart, Intelligence, and the Lower Soul, as its foundation.

As the human species progressed and man's spiritual capacity developed, Muhammad came as the seal of this (the Adamic) age and the opener of a new era—elaborating and explicating the first one. Therefore, at the time of Muhammad, "God's glance of mercy" turned to the higher lata'if, the rûh (spirit) and sirr (mystery). These were then awakened at the level of the ideal form of the human species.

This permitted further spiritual development which continued without a new revelation so that in the time of Ibn ʿArabî (d. 1240) the possibility of awakening the Arcane laṭif (Khafû) (one of the Hidden lata'if) was granted by God. At this time, "the People of Guidance," i.e., the Sufis, were inspired with the unity of God (tauhîd) and the fading of the world into the One Reality.\(^7\) This refers to Ibn ʿArabi's development of the philosophy of the Unity of Existence (wahdat al-wujûd) and indicates also how highly Ibn ʿArabî was ranked by Shahi Wali Allah.

Finally, Shahi Wali Allah himself was designated by God as the spokesman and wise man of the era in which the final centers, "the Philosopher's Stone" (hajar-i-baht) and "Selfhood" (anâniyya) lata'if, might be awakened.\(^7\)

While previous Sufi theories featured an interiorization of prophetic modes and qualities, Shahi Wali Allah reverses the direction of this process in a movement of exteriorization from the developed person, so that transformation of the one individual body in history can influence the ideal form which in turn expands the potential of all persons.\(^8\) Although mystical in cosmology and conception, an underlying message is the capacity of individual effort to transform the world.

This is but one aspect of the theory of lata'if which evokes a mood of reform and heightened individual responsibility. Another element which could be construed as prefiguring later reformist ideology is Wali Allah's integration of the path of prophetic inheritance with that of saintship, so that the key to an individual's highest spiritual fulfillment lies in following the way of the Prophet. Shahi Wali Allah expounded the 76 The "Holy Spirit" (al-rûh al-quds) is usually identified in Islamic tradition with the angel Gabriel and the level of Malakût with the angelic realm.

80 An interesting precursor to this concept is found in earlier Sufism. According to ʿAmr b. ʿUthmân al-Makki (d. 903–4), a person has four interior levels: body (tan), heart (dil), spirit (jûn), and secret (sirr). Makki mentions that "God created hearts seven thousand years before bodies; He created spirits seven thousand years before hearts; and He created secrets seven thousand years before spirits." Sufi awakening here would reverse back through the order of creation. Quoted in al-Ḥujwîrî, Kashf al-Mahjûb, p. 309, from al-Makki's Kitâb al-Muhabbat. The article by Kamada, "Study of the Term Sirr (Secret)," brought this passage to my attention.
Prophet’s traditions and model behaviors (sunna) in the Hujjat Allah al-Baligha and paved the way for successors, such as his grandson, Shâh Ismâ’il Shahîd, to construct a Sufi reform movement around the “Way of Muhammad” (tariqa Muḥammadiyya). An additional aspect of the reformist impulse may be seen in Shâh Walî Allâh’s formulation of a model of the spiritual body which incorporates material drawn from ethno-scientific theories of Islamic medicine. This shows a desire to encompass and bring together authoritative knowledge beyond the strictly religious sphere. This drive to encompass other branches of knowledge and integrate them within a unified shari‘a-based vision was to be emulated by a subsequent generation of ulema in the premodern period.

Robert Ellwood in his book Mysticism and Religion has suggested how a phase of gnostic, knowledge-oriented mysticism in many of the world’s religions has at a later period given way to a devotional “bhakti” type phase or movement. Ellwood suggests that this phenomenon is related to a shift in the understanding of personhood in the culture emerging during these periods. The development of Walî Allâh’s model elaborating the sphere of the individual person may indicate just such a transition, for a movement of increased devotion to the Prophet Muhammad among Sufi orders in various areas of the Muslim World was replacing the gnostic speculations of wahdat al-wujûd at about this time. Shâh Walî Allâh’s creative, and to a large extent conscious, restructuring of the Sufi model of the subtle body is an illustration of his skill in building on a set of organizing principles in understanding how the world works. His need to perform this exercise in thought is also indicative of his age, a more self-conscious time when individual reform was to be translated into community action, and the abstract and personal inspirations of Sufi realizations were to be brought into line with traditionally sanctioned interpretations of revelation.

Shâh Walî Allâh’s efforts to understand Islam based on the Qur’ân, hadîth, and shari‘a as a “total” system, informed by the same universal principles governing other types of knowledge, is one of his most original contributions. It is also a factor in his thought being acknowledged and invoked as a precedent by Islamic reformers of the modern period.

81 Shâh Ismâ’il Shahîd (d. 1831), the grandson of Shâh Walî Allâh, who, with Sayyid Ahmad Barelvi, founded a Sufi movement called the Tariqa Muḥammadiyya. The two eventually led a jihād against the Sikhs in the Northwest Frontier and died in battle in Balakote in 1831. Their movement is, therefore, commonly known as the Mujahidin movement. Shâh Ismâ’il Shahîd wrote a mystical text, ‘Abaqāṭ, in addition to reformist tracts such as Taqwiyat al-Imân.

85 Shâh Walî Allâh is invoked by Muslim Fundamentalists who stress the ideology of Islam as a total system organizing all areas of life, as well as by Modernists who appreciate his focus on the principles rather than the specific injunctions of shari‘a legislation.
